Introduction This paper investigates the use and role of metaphors in communication as used in Ngugi wa Thiongo's novel Matigari ma Njiruungi (1987). Within George Lakoff and Mark Johnson (1980

1980) and Matigari ma Njiruungi (Matigari, 1986), Ngugi reassesses that paradigm in order to incorporate elements and a narrative structure closer to Gikuyu oral traditions. For example, in "Ngugi wa Thiong'o's Visions of Africa," Christine Lofin (2000, p. 263) argues that the description of landscape in

CHAPTER-V MARXISM AND FANONISM IN NGUGI WA THIONG'O'S FICTION Ngugi wa Thiong'o has been writing since the days of the African Renaissance in the 1950's and has enriched the corpus of African literature through his varied writing. His ideological stand is made clear in his radical, polemical and critical essays.

On the other hand, Petals of Blood, Devil on the Cross and Matigari are about Ngugi's bitter criticism of neo-colonialism. In fact, there is also attack on slavery and colonialism. Ngugi's latest novel Wizard of the Crow (2006) is his conscious effort to sum up Africa of the 20th century. It dramatizes the corruption

i ABSTRACT This study is an analysis of Ngugi wa Thiong'o's portrayal of neo-colonial elitism and its influence in Kenya in his postcolonial novels, Petals of Blood (1977), Devil on the Cross (1982a) and Matigari (1989). The study employed a content analysis approach where the three novels

Kenyan Novelist, Ngugi Wa Thiong'o's latest work of fiction, Wizard of the Crow (2006), provides a continuum of the authors' literary career spanning over a period of 40 years. His novels, particularly, seem to present a consistent revision of thought, style, content and and the analysis of its aesthetics. All lead to the unmasking of the novel as a socially symbolic act, that is, a reflection of the problems of the author's immediate society, in particular, and the African continent in general. NARRATING POSTCOLONIAL DISILLUSIONMENT In Kill Me Quick the reader encounters a new realistic fiction from Kenya.
